Webinar | Covid-19 and Religion: Sustainable Development Before and After The Crisis (15 July 2020, 8 PM)

The COVID-19 pandemic has intensified and altered efforts around global economic, social, environmental and political development. The consequences of the virus are expected to be long lasting with world economies crippled and social inequalities exacerbated. According to Inger Andersen, Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), "The global coronavirus pandemic, which has already caused unimaginable devastation and hardship, has brought our way of life to an almost complete halt. The outbreak will have profound and lasting economic and social consequences in every corner of the globe".

This webinar discussed measures following the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic worldwide, including its implications on sustainable development. Speakers debated on how religion and faith groups today can contribute to development goals and the ways in which faith groups can (or already do) engage in civil society projects during COVID-19, how can this engagement continue?. Panellist from the University of Malaya, Datuk Prof. Dr Azizan Baharuddin provided a special look at the alignment between the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) while Datin Prof. Dr Raihanah Abdullah describes on Muslim principles and values, and the roles of Religious leaders in addressing Covid19 pandemic issues.

The organisers were delighted that we had a relatively good attendance, that stayed for the most part until the end of the 1.5 hour session. Only three questions were raised by the audience as the time were not sufficient enough for the speakers to response. The webinar was a successful event coordinated by both University of Malaya and KAICIID team and received positive response from the attendees. CCD hopes that this kind of collaboration will continue in many years to come.

邱武英：重考試輕人文 教育應回歸解決哲學

（八打灵再也27日讯）独中统考特别委员会前主席邱武英认为，如今的教育并没有注重完整性，而是专注于功能性教育，培养出许多为了应付考试而学习的学生，他认为，教育应回归在解决哲学教育的问题。

他认为，现在的教育较注重在科学和科技方面，唯不应因此忽略人文方面的事物，而是应塑造一个平衡的社会。

邱武英今日出席Projek57社会企业与马大民间对话中心联办的“《国家原则》作为马来

西亚民族团结的基础”对话会时，这么说。

他强调，现在有许多人对历史完全不理解，甚至出现历史被“颠倒”（songsang）的问题，称这个是必须解决的问题。

制定團結定義

另外，Projek57的联合创始人赛沙迪则提及，国家原则扮演者重要的角色，虽国人在求学时会谈到国家原则，却未进一步了解其中的深意，甚至工作后就完全抛诸脑后。

■邱武英（中）和赛沙迪（右）在对话会上分享自己对团结的看法，左为再鲁丁。

他认为，国家原则可以促进国民团结，成为国家的指南针，唯若国家要达到目的地，还是需要展开很多合作才能达到。

他也提及，大马也应该制定

本身对于团结的定义，而不是以其他国家的标准为标杆，因各国国情都有所不同。

对话会的主持人为伊斯兰青年运动（ABIM）副主席再鲁丁。

Pengantar Bersama

Timbalan Pengarah PDP, Dr Alwani Ghazali telah dijemput oleh Persatuan Mahasiswa sebagai panel yang mewakili pentadbir universiti dalam Kolokium Mahasiswa Kebangsaan. Kolokium tersebut telah berlangsung pada 20 hingga 21 November 2020 dan dianjurkan oleh Majlis Perwakilan Pelajar Malaysia (MPPK), Persatuan Belia HARMONI dan Pergerakan Tenaga Akademik Malaysia (GERAK). Pembentangan beliau yang bertajuk 'Memperkasakan Budaya Dialog dalam Kalangan Warga Universiti' telah mengupas kepentingan dialog di kalangan komponen-komponen, unit-unit dan pemegang taruh yang membentuk struktur sesebuah universiti.

Beliau berpendapat bahawa dialog adalah sangat instrumental dalam memperkukuhkan komunikasi di antara unit-unit yang berbeza di dalam universiti. Di samping itu, dialog adalah pentas mencari persefahaman yang penting bagi pelbagai latar belakang yang wujud dalam sesebuah universiti. Bagi mewujudkan dan memperkasakan budaya dialog, setiap pihak harus terlebih dahulu belajar mendengar dengan baik sebelum mampu bercakap atau menyampaikan dengan berkesan.

Antara cabaran dalaman yang dibincangkan pula termasuklah kata-kata kesat di kalangan jaguh papan kekunci segelintir Muslim yang menyadur Islam dengan sentimen perkauman serta salah faham di antara konsep 'izzah dengan kesombongan dalam beragama.

A History of UNESCO's Literary Policy from Its Inception to Now

This volume by a Canadian academic at Carlton University in Toronto should not be considered as essential reading for anyone interested in UNESCO, especially given the characterization of the organization in it, but it does shed light on its past and current purpose, especially as they relate to its promotion of advanced literacy. Sarah Brouillette admits at the end of her introduction that her narrative is “explicitly Marxist,” although that is more than obvious from the first pages. Indeed, Brouillette’s history of UNESCO’s book policy from 1945 to the present is basically one of the sort of “sellout” to commerce that academics so detest, and it is one that many people who follow UNESCO’s doings may well disagree with. On the other hand, this book is quite well-researched, especially in drawing on UNESCO documents and other primary materials such as literary works, which Brouillette critiques in the light of UNESCO’s avowed policies against the backdrop of the relevant decade. Basically, her book is the story of how UNESCO went from compiling translations of the world’s literary classics in the forties and fifties to promoting third-world local publishing as part of decolonization in the sixties and seventies to a gradual shift toward neoliberal intellectual property protectionism in the eighties and nineties, and from there to overt involvement in the commodification of culture in the developed world that it does in this century.

The first two chapters thus address UNESCO’s Collection of Representative Works, which consisted of the translation, usually into French or English, of literary classics from over eighty countries that the organization deemed worthy of storing in its Paris warehouses. Brouillette emphasizes that nearly all of UNESCO’s leadership in its first twenty years was Frenchmen or Englishmen, but she also addresses American hegemony after WWII, not only in its huge funding, but also in its attempts to use translations of literary works such as Yasunari Kawabata’s novel Snow Country to legitimize its development of postwar Japan. Chapters three and four narrate the twists of UNESCO’s cultural policies in the newly liberated former European colonies, especially its conflicts about how to institute mass education and literacy in them. The final two chapters relate the decline of literary reading worldwide and the rise of commodified culture, of which Brouillette considers UNESCO’s Cities of Literature and Creative Cities programs examples.

To repeat, Brouillette’s avowedly academic Marxist critique might be wearisome for many readers to will reject her depiction of UNESCO almost as a crypto-neo-imperialist and capitalism-serving body with a mainly Western leadership. Nevertheless, leaving aside the author’s interpretations, the facts she digs up about UNESCO’s evolution, especially its efforts to promote literary reading and literacy in conjunction with overall socio-cultural development around the world, will certainly be informative, and more importantly will help those who care about UNESCO’s mission going forward into the century to think about it better. Brouillette closes on the grim notes that in 2017 the USA withdrew its funding (again) and that China’s influence in it is growing, and she even opines that the organization’s days might be numbered. In sum, this is a thought-provoking volume.
